

"The Scottish Sun has enjoyed a long and fruitful relationship with Glasgow Clyde College.

Their team of media lecturers know that they can call on our journalists at any time for help and support. And, actually, I'd say we get as much out of it as the students.

It's an absolute joy to take part in a class, help with news conference, contribute to lectures, offer work experience - and attend their end of term prize giving.

We know from our own experience that there is nothing better than practical help from working journalists.

Glasgow Clyde capitalise on their links with the industry because they know it can energise their students and help the young people determine which path to pursue after graduation.

Our staff have always been impressed with the calibre of student and the enthusiasm which greets us every time we attend the college.

There is a real pride. And it remains even as the intake changes.

We've been fortunate enough to follow the paths of various students from 1st year through graduation.

At the Scottish Sun, we're always happy to accept work experience students and probably take more from Glasgow Clyde than any other establishment - because they're always knocking on our door.

In journalism you need to be a friendly pest!

We've just had our fourth annual News Academy conference - a programme established to help young journalism students - and Glasgow Clyde had a full contingent in attendance as usual.

They support our initiatives just as much as we support theirs. We're delighted to continue to work alongside them and help carve a future for our next generation of journalists."

Alan Muir, Editor, The Scottish Sun