

“There is regular and constructive contact between the Journalism Course at Glasgow Clyde College and BBC Scotland News.

Staff and students visit our newsroom at Pacific Quay, meet our news teams and ask lots of great questions.

The course tutors also invite BBC news staff to come to the College and talk to students on specific aspects of modern journalism particularly mobile and digital news coverage.

These are just two ways in which Glasgow Clyde College works with the broadcasting and digital journalism industry.

These close and regular contacts with the real world of journalism are good examples of how the Glasgow Clyde College ensures its training is up to date. As a result their students emerge very well prepared to enter the jobs market.”

Peter McCrae, Deputy Head of News, BBC Scotland